

Meet the Artists

A

Mary Ann Sells, M.B.A., Ph.D.

A creative mind for both science and the arts

Mary Ann Sells is a Fox Chase scientist and research administrator, whose creative sense has been seen in the laboratory as well as on the stage. In her professional life, she understands and supports the creative process involved in conducting laboratory research. But her creativity doesn't end with the workday. Her involvement in dance and the art community has included designing and making costumes for others as well as for her own performances. She also enjoys quilting, sculpting, and interior design.

B

Stephen Heigh

Illustrator, teacher, and bearer of family tradition

Stephen Heigh teaches illustration as a professor at Moore College of Art & Design in Philadelphia. The son of an automobile designer, Stephen carries on his family's creative tradition through his own work. His children's books—"Mr. George and the Red Hat" and "The Snowman in the Moon"—have won national awards for writing and illustrating. In addition, Lucas Films has selected Stephen's work for a "Star Wars" tribute book, called "Visions," to be released in late 2010. The book features artwork by top illustrators, artists, and designers—all hand-picked by George Lucas. The art also will be part of a national art museum tour. Visit Stephen's Web site at www.stephenheigh.com.

C

George Bramhall

A self-taught artist with a talent for showcasing nature

George Bramhall is a former World War II pilot, retired investment banker, fly-fisherman, and self-taught artist based in Bucks County, Pa. He is represented by several galleries, including North Water Gallery, Edgartown, Mass.; Lambertville Gallery of Fine Arts, Lambertville, N.J.; and William Ris Gallery, Stone Harbor, N.J. Many of his paintings evoke the natural beauty of the beaches and marshlands of New Jersey and Martha's Vineyard, Mass., where he often goes fishing.

D

Regina Craig McLaughlin

A grandmother with a love for family and art

Regina Craig McLaughlin, a grandmother with a lifelong love of art, finds inspiration in family. From hers, she has learned that "love is all that matters in life." She lost her father and two siblings to cancer and has a sister, who is a breast cancer survivor and now, a cervical cancer patient. Through her participation in the Holiday Hope Card Project, Regina pays tribute to them and to all who are facing a diagnosis of cancer.
